"KING SOLOMON AND THE IRON WORKER"
By C. Schusselle, Engraved by John Sartain

THE First Temple—known as King Solomon's Temple—with its corridors, courts and massive walls, was the grandest and costliest edifice ever erected. This temple is the scene of the above picture. Upon the completion of it King Solomon prepared a feast for his chief craftsmen and artificers, and also a seat of honor on his right hand, ready for that craftsman most worthy to occupy it. When the guests were assembled they found the seat of honor already occupied by a man clad in the garb of labor. Questioning him, it was found that he was the iron worker who had shaped all the tools for the other craftsmen, without which they could not have done their part in the construction and decoration of the Temple. "Therefore," said King Solomon, "Son of the Forge, I too honor thee, take thou this seat at my right hand prepared for the most worthy. It is thy due."

THE reconciliation of Egeus and Hermia, his daughter, a beautiful Greek maiden took place in Titania's wood.

Egeus entered the wood in pursuit of his daughter, who had fled with her lover Lysander. He desired her to marry a young Athenian, Demetrius by name, but when he found that Demetrius had transferred his love to Helena (through the efforts of Titania), another beautiful Greek maiden, he no longer opposed Hermia's marriage with Lysander and he gave his consent for the wedding to take place on the same day as that on which Hermia had been condemned to death for refusing to marry Demetrius.

Helena promised to marry Demetrius on the same day.

Oberon and Titania, king and queen of the fairies, rejoiced over the reconciliation and resolved to celebrate the approaching nuptials with revels throughout their kingdom.
